

Hybrid mining/road project draws scrutiny - 2/7

By Anna Sale

Last May, state and federal highway officials and coal company executives joined to break ground on a new section of the King Coal Highway. This isn't your typical road project. It's a public/private partnership that combines mining and highway construction, and it only took six months to sign the deal and begin work on the road, but now critics say laws were broken in the process.