Holidays Are Time To Support Local Businesses

Plumbers and Steamfitters Local Union 83 located in Wheeling, has been confronting the contractors who refuse to hire local workers at the Ohio Valley Plaza in St. Clairsville, Ohio.

The Ohio Valley Plaza is being developed by THF Realty and includes four anchor stores: Wal-Mart, Lowes, SAM's Warehouse Club, and Kroger along with 30 retail stores. The project's estimated cost was $30 million.

Most stores are being built without union Plumbers and Pipefitters.

Local 83 has been picketing the site since Nov. 1st.

ACT placed ads in the Wheeling News Register and the Times Leader on Thanksgiving Day urging the public to shop at the Ohio Valley Mall, which was built with local union building trades workers.

"The holiday season is a good time to remind everyone to patronize those businesses, like those located at the Ohio Valley Mall, which have supported the local community by using local labor," said Joe Kochy, organizer for Local 83.

When local workers are used by companies to construct new businesses, they spend their money and pay taxes in the area, Kochy said. However, when out of the area workers are employed, they generally return home to spend the money they have earned.

The business owners who use local workers can expect the wages they pay to go back into the community and to help strengthen the area's economy.

This is one of the reasons why the members of Local 83 feel it is very important to show their support to the Ohio Valley Mall as opposed to the Ohio Valley Plaza.

"It makes sense for local people to support those businesses that in turn support them," said Kochy. "It's offending when someone uses

Huntington-Based Jo-Del Gets Hit With Complaint By NLRB

Unfair Labor Practice charges filed by the Tri-State Building and Construction Trades Council have turned into a formal complaint by the National Labor Relations Board (NLRB) against Jo-Del Construction of Huntington.

Tom Williams, organizer for Tri-State Building Trades said three separate sets of charges were filed with the NLRB and a favorable decision has been made on the first round of charges.

"The fact that the board is looking upon it so expeditiously tells me that they realize the seriousness of the charges that we're presenting them with."

-Tom Williams, Tri-State Building Trades Organizer

"The complaint issued by the Board stated that the owner, Jeffrey B. Reidel, threatened employees with loss of jobs if they selected the union and he threatened and coerced employees by telling union supporters they could go to work elsewhere," Williams said.

He said the threats took place at a mandatory meeting of all employees. The Board also charged that

Parks & Recreation Take Enforcement Seriously

Steve Montoney, ACT's northern representative, has worked hard to help state agencies enforce prevailing wage laws.

His work is paying off at the Parks and Recreation Department of the W. Va. Division of Natural Resources where certified payrolls are now required before contractors get paid.

"During some of our checks on various projects at Cansan Valley a few years ago, we learned Parks and Recreation had not collected certified payrolls when they were doing

PARKERSBURG LOCALS ARE "SANTA'S HELPERS"

The Parkersburg City Park's "Holiday in the Park" light display has more than doubled in its second year, with a little bit of help from local unions.

Two of the newest displays in the park this year should make Santa's job a little brighter: the first is a Christmas cottage circled by guards of tin soldiers, candles and candy canes that greets visitors at the entrance to the park.

The 1600-light display was built and sponsored by Carpenters Local 899 and Painters Local 1144 and contains drop boxes where visitors can place donations.

A second display sponsored by the Parkersburg-Marietta Building and Construction Trades Council features the North Pole Post Office and Santa's Mailbox. Area children can place their letters to Santa in the mailbox and volunteers will see that Santa gets and answers them.

Other displays are sponsored by community groups, businesses and individuals.

"Special thanks should be given to Bevin Seaman, and Dan Polling, and the members and apprentices of Carpenters Local 899 and Painters Local 1144 who worked on these projects," said Sam Davis, business manager for the Parkersburg/Marietta Building and Construction Trades Council, and who also helped work on the Council's display.

Many hours were spent in the building, painting and installation of these displays and all crafts who are members of the building trades donated the funds to purchase the materials, Davis explained.

"This is just another visible example of how local workers contribute to our communities," he said.

PARKS & RECREATION TAKE ENFORCEMENT SERIOUSLY

"Maintenance and construction work," Montoney said.

At that time, Montoney said, Parks and Recreation had never collected certified payrolls on maintenance and had no intention of ever even checking on these state projects, even though they are required by law to pay prevailing wage on all jobs funded with state monies.

When he checked further recently, he was told by Steven Debar of Parks and Recreation he didn't have any way of getting them.

"But he assured me that prevailing wage specifications would be in the next round of bids," he said.

Montoney said he heard about a small job constructing a maintenance building at Audra State Park in Upshur County, so he requested certified payrolls.

The response was surprising.

"I received a letter from John Warder, an Engineering Technician for the Department of Parks and Recreation which stated that their policy is the requirement of the contractor to submit certified payrolls when any application for application of payment is received.

"They came through with their promise and that was done because they were concerned about the cheating that was going on on these state park projects, like at Canaan."

"I sent him the letter as soon as he received the certified payrolls, he will forward copies to me," he said.

"We're really happy with the cooperation we've gotten from Parks and Recreation and we really appreciate their concern," Montoney said.

"They came through with their promise and that was done because they were concerned about the cheating that was going on on these state park projects, like at Canaan."

Montoney said ACT usually isn't able to look at all state jobs going on but when he sees a new contractor trying to break into prevailing wage work he checks up on them to make sure they're in compliance.

"Because of funding we sometimes can't look at the small jobs. If we had everyone on board at ACT and paying their fair share, we could look at more small projects, and could hopefully get rid of more cheating contractors."

SUPPORT LOCAL BUSINESSES

out of area workers for the construction of their project and then expects the local community to support them by spending their hard-earned money at their businesses."

The Kroger store being built in the Ohio Valley Plaza is one of three new stores to be built in the Ohio Valley area.

"It is our hope that by peacefully making the public aware of our position, the other two stores will be built with union plumbers and pipefitters from this area," he said. "The bottom line is -- our members would rather be working than picketing."

"They want to be employed on construction jobs in the communities where they live."
Jo-Del Gets Hit With Complaint By NLRB

a representative of Jo-Del interrogated an employee about his union membership; and that he transferred and reduced the wages of an employee because of his union membership, and that three employees were terminated because of union sympathy, Williams said.

"This first round of charges is scheduled to go before an administrative law judge January 15th," Williams said.

He speculated about how much faster the case seems to be going than others in the works.

"It's moving pretty quickly," he said, "because we are in the midst of what the Board calls a bona fide organizing campaign."

Williams said the committee formed to work on the Jo-Del organizing campaign is using all the tools they've got but this is truly a case of "inside-out" organizing.

"The fact that the board is looking upon it so expeditiously tells me that they realize the seriousness of the charges that we're presenting them with," he said.

Williams said the campaign began when the employee (who is now on the organizing campaign committee) met with him, Randy May, and the undercover union agent and then introduced them to the other three employees who were interested in organizing Jo-Del.

"All four were carpenters and were fairly long-term employees. I think the most recent hire was two years and the longest around seven years," Williams said.

He said that's another factor the board looks upon favorably -- "this is not simply a union trying to organize Jo-Del, but Jo-Del employees trying to organize and we're helping."

The NLRB in investigating the other two sets of charges as well, Williams said. They too involved additional cases of interrogation and termination as well as failure to hire union applicants.

Williams estimates Jo-Del employs around 80 workers and is doing quite a lot of work around the state.

He said most of the NLRB charges concern workers on the West Virginia Cold Drawn project in Pt. Pleasant, Mason County.

"But this campaign is not worksite-oriented, it's employer-oriented. It's ongoing wherever Jo-Del goes."

He said workers are concerned about benefits, wages when not on prevailing wage work, and working conditions.

"Organizing Jo-Del would be a great asset to all its employees as well as the Building Trades," Williams said.

The campaign committee also instituted a handbilling campaign targeting one of Jo-Del's customers -- Revco, in Huntington and Chesapeake.

"We were just advising Revco customers that Jo-Del has engaged in unfair labor practices, but we didn't ask them to refrain from buying with Revco at this time," he said.

"Basically, our purpose was to let Revco and their customers know about Jo-Del and the complaints issued by the federal government."

The ABC and other anti-union organizations like to characterize construction organizing efforts as being implemented in order to harass employers rather than to organize employees, Williams said.

According to Williams, one of the goals in this campaign has been to lay this myth to rest by establishing credibility with the NLRB, government officials and most importantly with the unorganized workers we seek to represent.

"In this respect, by placing the welfare of workers above any other consideration, I believe that this campaign has already been successful but the job will not be complete until Jo-Del Inc. has signed a collective Bargaining Agreement and the employees are all members of a union."

Tri-State Building Trades Organizer
