ACT Urges Members To Recruit

In an effort to get more local unions involved, ACT recently mailed its members hand-out cards for distribution on the job. Each ACT member received three cards in the mailing along with a letter encouraging them to try to get more building trades workers involved in the ACT program.

The card included a listing of the 34 locals participating in ACT, projects ACT has monitored, what ACT does for members, and how joining ACT will improve a union construction workers' life.

"Only a little more than half of the union building trades membership in West Virginia belongs to ACT," said Steve White.

"The work we do benefits all union construction workers," he said.

"Imagine the impact we would have if we doubled our membership and every union building trades worker in the state participating in ACT. We could buy more advertising and fight more fights for more jobs. It's money that makes the difference."

White said many don't participate because they simply don't understand what ACT does for them.

"Hopefully, we can get our membership involved in recruiting other union members, who can only gain from the growth."

"All we ask for is an opportunity to go to their local union meeting and present what ACT is all about."

Convention Sparks New ACT Interest From Many Locals

A proposed amendment to make membership in the Affiliated Construction Trades Foundation a requirement of the state building trades failed at last month's convention.

The convention, held in Morgantown on June 27 & 28, was attended by approximately 100 building trades delegates.

Prior to the meeting delegates received a package of proposed amendments to the constitution which require a two-thirds vote. The most significant proposal was a revised constitution that would have raised building trades dues by 20¢ and dedicated that increase to the ACT Foundation.

This would have resulted in a 5¢ decrease for those members already paying into ACT.

"Our goal was to have everyone paying into ACT," commented Steve White, ACT director.

"All we heard from the opponents was how great ACT was."

"The bottom line is everyone is happy to get the benefits of ACT, some just want it for free."

"Actually in some ways we come out stronger after the convention," said White.

"Many locals have come to us asking for more information and presentations at their meetings."

We can see some real opportunities to grow."

Also suggested was a restructuring of the State Building Trades executive board.

Proposed was a seat on the executive board for each craft in the building trades.

Right now the state building trades executive board is made up of the presidents and vice presidents of local building trades.

Iron Workers 301 Start Fund For Accident Victims

An accident June 18 at a downtown Charleston parking building killed a member of Iron Workers Local 301 and severely injured another.

Both were members of ACT.

Freddie Searls, 57 of Hamlin, was pulled from the rubble by members of Iron Workers 301 that evening about three hours after a 10-ton pre-fabricated concrete beam fell on him.

The other worker, Claude McCormick, 52, of Charleston, suffered a broken back and ribs and was released from General Division, CAMC June 25.

Officials from the Occupational Safety and Health Administration were on the scene that same evening.

Steven Sowards is the chief investigator for the agency.

Jobs Act Back On ‘Front Burner’
Local Hiring Garners Support

ACT’s legislative representative Raymond “B.B.” Smith has put the West Virginia Jobs Act “back on the front burner,” after concentrating on the primary election.

Three more counties have passed a resolution to support local hiring on publicly funded projects, for a total of 32 counties.

Summers County voted June 17 and Monroe and McDowell Counties voted in early July.

“I’m concentrating on getting support from the remaining County Commissions for local hiring,” Smith said.

ACT has a bill designed to accomplish local hiring. The West Virginia Jobs Act would require 90 percent of the workforce on construction projects to be hired from the local workforce. That includes workers living within West Virginia and all bordering counties of neighboring states.

Smith said he is considering going to county Boards of Education asking for a similar resolution on local hiring.

“We hope to attend meetings at all of the Boards of Education to talk about local hiring and ask for support, just like we have done at the County Commissions,” he said.

Smith said he would also like to appeal to any ACT member who sits on their county Board of Education or has family or coworkers on the Board to please contact the ACT office.

Getting approval from the various county organizations can only help get a local hiring bill passed at the legislature, Smith said.

“Any time you’ve got people and organizations supporting a bill, it’s got to help with the local delegates and senators.”

ACT/Trades Stay Separate

“...there’s no voting representative of the Painters, Asbestos Workers, Cement Masons, Bricklayers, Iron Workers, Roofers, Sheet Metal Workers or a number of other crafts,” said Steve Burton, Business Manager of the Tri-State Building Trades.

“We don’t think that a building trade can be successful without representation for all crafts.”

Further discussion included a resolution to change the number of delegates allowed at the convention.

A proposal was made to allow delegates based on craft membership across the state.

“If you had one big local or many small locals it shouldn’t matter,” argued Bruce Tarpley, Business manager of Operating Engineers Local 132.

“I think you should add up the active members and base your delegate count on that,” he said.

“Instead what you have now is affiliated organizations who pay $50 per year getting as much voting power as a 300 person local. That doesn’t make sense.”

In the end all proposed changes failed.

On the second day many delegates had already gone home but the business of the convention was not done.

John Jarrett, representing the Chemical Valley District Council of Carpenters, asked that an amendment to restructure voting rights which failed the previous day be reconsidered.

The motion passed but was contingent on the passage of the amendment to include ACT into the building trades. Jarrett stopped short of that final move.

“I just wanted to show those who accused us of manipulating the system that we could have done what they accused us of,” said Jarrett.

“We were looking for solutions as a building trade and we were shot down by a few who were playing the old games in a new and sophisticated world. They succeeded in accomplishing nothing, that’s not much of a victory.”

Besides the proposed amendment to the constitution the only other piece of business was the election of officers.

Elected to the President’s position was Steve Burton, a member of Carpenters Local 302 and the Business Manager for the Tri-States Building Trades Council.

Burton was appointed to fill out the term of Everett Sullivan, who retired in April of this year.

Burton also holds a seat on the West Virginia AFL-CIO Executive Board.

Elected as Secretary-Treasurer was Roy Smith, Smith a member of the Electricians had been appointed to fill out the term of E. Allen Fisher who retired two years ago.

Elected to Trustee positions were Ron Bush, business manager of Boilermakers Local 667, Bob Sutphin, business agent of Carpenters Local 1207 and Bruce Tarpley, business manager of Operating Engineers Local 132.

“We were accused of a lot of things but they can’t accuse us of not trying to lead.”

Tax Breaks For Out-Of-State Jobs Wrong
ACT Argues In Nitro

The city of Nitro recently worked out a deal with THF Realty Inc. to build a Walmart shopping plaza, similar to one it built at South Ridge Center on Corridor G, at what ACT believes is a drawback to taxpayers.

Bill Thomas, ACT industrial representative, sent letters to Nitro residents encouraging them to become involved in the public comment period.

“The city of Nitro has agreed to some huge concessions for THF,” Thomas said. “Even though we had a good turnout at the City Council meeting, and most of the people there were against the idea, I think the deal is still going to go through.”

As proposed, THF will receive $42,000,000 of the City Business & Occupation tax collections, and 80 percent of anything over that amount for the first twenty years, for a total of $4 million or less than $8 million.

“Not only are the businesses of Nitro upset that this new big facility will get an unfair advantage on taxes, but the people of Cross Lanes, where the property is to be annexed, are upset as well,” he said. “The interstate exit at Cross Lanes is overly busy as it is.”

Thomas said one of the main reasons ACT became involved is because the developer is not making any guarantees to hire local workers for the project.

“This same developer bought contractors from St. Louis, MO and Toledo, OH to build similar projects in the Wheeling and Charleston areas,” Thomas said. “ACT is currently working on an organizing effort at the St. Clairesville, OH project near Wheeling.

“It’s incredible that we’re giving millions of dollars to attract these projects, when out-of-state workers get the jobs.”

He said the ACT Foundation supports sound economic development which creates jobs for local workers, improves the quality of our communities and, if needed offers modes tax incentives not huge tax giveaways.
ACT Stops Harrison Co. Prevailing Wage Challenge

Prevaling wage rates are under attack every day. Often workers are paid under the wrong classification.

But in Clarksburg ACT’s Steve Montoney recently faced a new challenge.

Montoney said Kent Rollins, labor compliance officer for the Region VI Planning & Development Council in Fairmont, sent out an “Area Practice Survey” to assess the work classifications being paid to heavy and highway construction workers.

According to Montoney, the project Rollins was concerned about was the Bridgeport Waste Water Treatment plant, funded in part with federal money.

Rollins contended it was unclear which craft rate was to be paid for tying re-bar, setting concrete forms or preparing for a concrete pour. Rollins mailed a survey to area contractors requesting their opinion for which wage rate to pay on several classifications of work.

“We argued that there was no question about work practices,” Iron Workers tie re-bar, Carpenters set forms, and Laborers pour concrete,” Montoney said.

“But to make sure we covered all bases we asked union building trades contractors to fill out the survey,” said Montoney. “Eventually he decided to go back to the current U.S. Department of Labor wage rates, which in Harrison County is set from collective bargaining rates, and follow union jurisdiction.”

Montoney had found that on the waste water treatment plant jobs some employees of Breckengridge, Inc were turned in as Class III Form Setters, but should have been classified as carpenters.

“If there are contractors or awarding agencies that feel the wage rates are too high or the classifications inconsistent with area practice, the proper approach would be to ask for a new wage survey from the DOL,” he said.

“If the survey shows lower rates or that a collectively bargained rate is not the prevailing wage rate, only then would an “Area Practice Survey” be needed.”

ACT/Building Trades Picket P-burg Restaurant

On June 21, members of Parkersburg/Marietta Building & Construction Trades Council demonstrated in a public information picket at the construction site of the Outback Steakhouse at the Grand Central Mall in Parkersburg. Their message -- Don’t Back Outback.

The message was repeated in a half-page ad ACT ran in the local newspaper.

Jim Lewis, one of ACT’s new fair contracting representatives, has been focussing on the construction of the restaurant in Parkersburg.

Outback hired Venture Construction of North Carolina as the general contractor, who in turn hired many out-of-state subcontractors, such as Cape Construction of Annapolis, Md., Precision Construction of Fairfax, Va., Nuccia Heating & Air Conditioning of Tampa, Fl., J&H Bender Contracting of Virginia Beach, Va., and Pro Set Tile of Cloverdale, Va.

“Outback Steakhouse wants us to support their business, but they haven’t helped our community any by giving our local workers jobs,” Lewis said.

“Some of the large national chains build their stores and restaurants with cheap out-of-state contractors, while seeking tax abatements, infrastructure improvement, tax relief packages and other cost saving measures from the community. ACT is merely trying to point this out to the community.”

Lewis said by bringing out-of-state contractors and workers into the area, they cheat our local construction men and women out of decent paying jobs.

“Local construction workers are our community leaders, school bond supporters and tax payers,” he said.

Attending Summer School in Morgantown sponsored by West Virginia AFL-CIO and WVU Institute of Labor Studies are from left Jeff Fitcher of Plumbers & Fitters Local 565, Rita McRobie of Laborers Local 379, Clarence “Bull” Clouch of Boilermakers Local 667, Rick Williams of North Central Building & Construction Trades Council and Dan Poling of Painters Local 1144.
ACT Begins New COMET Program For Non-Union Workers In Parkersburg

The Construction Organizing Education and Training (COMET) Program is adding a new dimension, according to Bill Thomas, ACT industrial representative.

"I think this is probably the most difficult thing we've ever tried," he said. "We intend to hold COMET classes in the Parkersburg area to educate unorganized construction workers."

Jim Lewis, ACT's most recently hired fast contracting representative, said the purpose for the nonunion COMET classes is to "find our common ground, and inform them that the union is not their enemy. Certainly our fortunes and futures are tied together."

If either construction workers succeed, it will be because both union and non-union work together," Lewis said.

The two said this is a "pilot program" in the Parkersburg area and their first step would likely be the development of a working relationship with the non-organized construction workers of Parkersburg, hopefully with the end result of seeing how we can help each other.

The program presentation is still in the formation stage, but will hopefully be ready for a trial run the end of July, Lewis said. "We intend to bring non-union workers together with the union leadership to talk about a connection between their ability to earn a living and same for union workers," he said.

According to Lewis, the basic idea behind this initiative is that "we understand as long as union and non-union workers are competing for jobs, they only serve to drive wages and working conditions down."

Thomas said the program came about after several business managers of ACT locals asked for help with commercial construction.

"We're not sure which crafts want to participate in this program," Thomas said. "We have a strong interest from the Carpenters, Sheet Metal Workers, Painters, and a few others."

Thomas also is working on COMET classes for building trades members. "Call it what you want, we can educate members about the problems we face and the new organizing techniques like salting," said Thomas. "Unions members then have a powerful tool to improve their job opportunities and keep decent working standards in their communities. It really works."

PREPARING TO PUT IN APPLICATIONS at the Embassy Suites in Charleston are local union members. Approximately 90 showed up to apply. Jim Lewis, ACT fair contracting representative, filmed the workers as documentation for possible legal action as they waited nearby the job site in late June. Embassy Suites is building a $25 million hotel with out-of-state contractors.

ACT Investigation Changes Corps Mis-Classification

Steve Montoney, ACT's northern representative recently investigated a vehicle maintenance facility and boat ramp in Clarksburg funded through the Army Corps of Engineers, and came up with some problems he made sure were corrected. The main contractor on the job was Talasilia Inc., of Ingonam, Pa.

"The money value on the project was $1.49 million and their payroll seemed to check out," Montoney said.

He noticed the forms subcontractors were required to fill out for federal jobs have a space for the wage rate, but if the employee is owner/operator, and therefore paying himself, then the space can be left blank.

"There were a lot of owner/operators on this job, which I found to be strange," Montoney commented. "One of them, Mazzeo's Excavating of Nutter Fork, WV, had three owner operators, so I checked a little further."

He went to the Secretary of State's office to see how Mazzeo's was listed, and found it was listed as a sole proprietorship, which means it has only one owner.

"How can a sole proprietorship have three owner/operators?" he questioned.

Montoney turned around and took the information right back to the Corps of Engineers.

"The Corps of Engineers' representative, Diane Stevens, went over my claim and she admitted there was something wrong with
